

Task Force Member Biographies

PROJECT ADVISORS

James E. Auer is Director of the Center for US-Japan Studies and Cooperation at Vanderbilt University's Vanderbilt Institute for Public Policy Studies. His Ph.D. in International Relations is from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University. He served twenty years as a Naval Officer, commanding a frigate homeported in Japan and attending the Japan Maritime Self-Defense Force Staff College. He also served as the Special Assistant for Japan in the Office of the Secretary of Defense for ten years before moving to Nashville. His activities at Vanderbilt include research and writing, as well as teaching for the Departments of East Asian Studies and History.

Charles D. Ferguson is Scientist-in-Residence based in the Washington DC Office of the Monterey Institute for International Studies' Center for Nonproliferation Studies (CNS). He joined CNS from the US Department of State, where he was a Foreign Affairs Officer in the Office of the Senior Coordinator for Nuclear Safety in the Bureau of Nonproliferation. At the State Department, he helped coordinate US government interagency nuclear safety policy on decommissioned Russian marine nuclear reactors, the Korean Peninsula Energy Development Organization (KEDO) light water reactor project in the DPRK, Indian and Pakistani commercial nuclear power plants, and Russian plutonium production reactors. He has also served as a nuclear arms control and nonproliferation analyst at the Federation of American Scientists (FAS), where he directed the Nuclear Policy Project. At FAS, he analyzed many arms control and nonproliferation issues, including missile defense, the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, and deep cuts in nuclear arsenals. His public policy articles, commentaries, and letters have appeared in Arms Control Today, The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, The FAS Public Interest Report, the Los Angeles Times, and the Washington Post, among others. He earned a BS degree with distinction in physics and a commission as an officer in the US Navy from the US Naval Academy. Upon leaving the Navy, he earned an MA and a Ph.D. in physics from Boston University.

Alan D. Romberg is Senior Associate and Director of the East Asia Program at The Henry L. Stimson Center. Prior to joining Stimson, he spent many years working on US policy issues in East Asia, both in government and in the think tank community. Mr. Romberg served as Principal Deputy Director of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff (1994-98), Senior Adviser and Director of the Washington Office of the US Permanent Representative to the United Nations (1998-99), and Special Assistant to the Secretary of the Navy (1999-2000). He was Director of Research and Studies at the United States Institute of Peace in 1994, following almost ten years as C.V. Starr Senior Fellow for Asian Studies at the Council on Foreign Relations (1985-1994). He was a Foreign Service Officer from 1964 to 1985, serving in various capacities dealing with East Asia, including as Director of the State Department Office of Japanese Affairs and Staff Member at the National Security Council responsible for China. Mr. Romberg was Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and Deputy Spokesman of the Department from 1981-1985. He has written extensively on US policy, focusing in particular on US relations with the People's Republic of China, Taiwan, Korea and Japan.

Yoshihide Soeya has been Professor of Political Science and International Relations at the Faculty of Law of Keio University since 1995, which he joined in 1988 as Assistant Professor. He has also been serving as a Faculty Fellow of the Research Institute of Economy, Trade and Industry since 2001. Before joining the Faculty of Law of Keio University, he served as Academic Assistant at the Institute of International Relations of Sophia University, and as Researcher at the Research Institute for Peace and Security (RIPS) in Tokyo. Dr. Soeya has chaired and participated in numerous multinational projects including those on Myanmar and ASEAN, US-Japan-Korea security relations, post-Cold War Asia-Pacific security environment, confidence-building measures in Asia, and building a US-Japan security community. He was also a member of the Prime Minister's Commission on "Japan's Goals in the 21st Century," under the late Prime Minister Keizo Obuchi. He is the author of numerous articles and publications, which include "Taiwan in Japan's Security Considerations," China Quarterly, No. 165 (March 2001); and Japan's Dual Identity and the U.S.-Japan Alliance (Asia/Pacific Research Center, Stanford University, May 1998).

PROJECT CONTRIBUTORS

Nobumasa Akiyama is Assistant Professor at the Hiroshima Peace Institute (HPI). He is also an adjunct research fellow at the Center for Promotion of Disarmament and Non-Proliferation of the Japan Center for International Affairs (JIIA). At the HPI he directed the research project on legitimacy and rationality of new-interventionism. Prior to joining the HPI, he was a Senior Researcher at the Association for Communication of Transcultural Study (ACT Foundation). He was a visiting fellow of the Stimson Center in 2000. He has conducted research in energy security, nuclear disarmament and non-proliferation, and conflict prevention and post-conflict peace building. He published numerous papers and articles, including a chapter entitled, "Struggle between National Interest and Humanitarianism: A Case of Italy's 'Mission Rainbow,'" in Humanitarian Crises and International Intervention: Prescriptions for Recovering Peace (Yushindo, 2003) and “Japan, Protecting Against the Spread of Nuclear, Biological and Chemical Weapons: An Action Agenda for the Global Partnership, Vol.3” (CSIS, 2003). He received a Bachelor of Law degree from Hitotsubashi University in Tokyo in 1990. In 1994, he earned a Master of Public Affairs degree from Cornell University in New York.

Katsuhisa Furukawa is Senior Research Associate at the Washington DC Office of the Monterey Institute for International Studies’ Center for Nonproliferation Studies (CNS). Prior to coming to CNS in November 2001, he was a Research Associate with the Council of Foreign Relations, working on projects related to East Asian Security, especially on Japan and Korea. Mr. Furukawa has worked in the United States for the NHK Japan Broadcasting Corporation, as an Adjunct Associate Producer, and for the Center for Strategic and International Security’s Pacific Forum, as a Visiting Fellow. In Japan, Mr. Furukawa worked as Chief of Policy Planning Staff at the Reform of Heisei, an NGO that specialized in promoting programs on political and economic reform in Japan, where he was charged with overseeing activities on a variety of issues and was responsible for liaising with government and business leaders as well as labor union chairmen. He holds a BA in Economics from Keio University, in Tokyo, and a Master of Public Administration from Harvard’s John F. Kennedy School of Government. Mr. Furukawa has published numerous articles, participated in the creation of several documentary films, and lectures occasionally.

Ken Jimbo became Director of Research at the Japan Forum for International Relations (JFIR) in July 2003. Prior to joining JFIR, he was a research fellow at the Japan Institute of International Affairs (JIIA), where he studied the US–Japan security alliance, multilateral security in the Asia-Pacific region, and missile defense at the Center for Asia-Pacific Studies and the Center for American Studies. His works appear in numerous publications, and include Missile Defense: A New Framework of International Security, Satoshi Morimoto, ed. (The Japan Institute of International Affairs, 2002) and “ASEAN Regional Forum and Preventive Diplomacy: Regionalization of the Concept,” The Journal of National Defense. He has held many research fellowships including a visiting fellowship at the Asia-Pacific Research Center at Waseda University, Tokyo. He earned a BA in Policy Management at Keio University, Tokyo, and an MA at the Graduate School of Media and Governance, Keio University. He is currently working toward his Ph.D. at the Graduate School of Media and Governance, Keio University.

Andrew L. Oros is Assistant Professor of Political Science and International Studies at Washington College in Chestertown, Maryland. In 2001-02, he served as Japan Task Force manager at the Pacific Council on International Policy, the western partner of the Council on Foreign Relations, leading to his co-authored publication, Can Japan Come Back?. Dr. Oros received his doctorate in political science from Columbia University, writing on “the politics of domestic antimilitarism” in Japan’s postwar and recent security policies, based in part on research conducted over his two years of residence at the University of Tokyo. He continues to conduct research on areas related to the domestic politics of security policy, including the areas of foreign intelligence and theater missile defense. Previously he studied Japan-Europe relations as a Marshall scholar at the London School of Economics (M.S., 1992), and international relations and East Asian languages and cultures at the University of Southern California (B.A., 1991). His work has appeared in numerous publications, including Japan Forum, The Journal of Public and International Affairs, Intelligence and National Security, The International Journal of Intelligence and Counterintelligence, Millennium, his co-edited book, Culture in World Politics, and numerous newspapers around the world.

Benjamin L. Self is Senior Associate of the East Asia Program at the Henry L. Stimson Center. He directs the Center’s programs on confidence-building measures, Japanese security policy, the US-Japan alliance. Prior to joining the Stimson Center, he was a Visiting Research Fellow at Keio University in Tokyo for two years, on a Fulbright Graduate Research Fellowship, and from 1993 to 1996 was Program Associate in the Asia Program of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars. He received his MA in Japan Studies and International Economics in 1993 from Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS). His BA in political science is from Stanford University. He is author of “China-Japan Relations: A Façade of Friendship.” (Washington Quarterly, Winter 2002-2003) and co-editor of An Alliance for Engagement: Building Cooperation in Security Relations with China (Stimson Center, August 2002).

Sheila A. Smith is a Research Fellow in Politics and Security at the East-West Center located in Honolulu, Hawaii. Prior to joining the Center, she was an Assistant Professor at Boston University. She has held many visiting fellowships in Japan, including terms of research with the International Institute for Japanese Studies in Kyoto as a Visiting Associate Professor and with the University of the Ryukyus in Okinawa. Her works have been widely published in numerous books and scholarly journals, including “Japan’s Uneasy Citizens and the US-Japan Alliance,” Asia-Pacific Issues, No. 54 (Honolulu: East West Center, September 2001) and “The Evolution of Military Cooperation in the U.S.-Japan Alliance,” in U.S.-Japan Security Relations: Past, Present and Future, Michael J. Green and Patrick Cronin, eds. (Washington, DC: Council on Foreign Relations, 1999). She received her BA with magna cum laude from the Political Science and East Asian Languages and Cultures Departments, an MA and a Ph.D. in Political Science at Columbia University.

Jeffrey W. Thompson is Research Associate of the East Asia Program at the Henry L. Stimson Center, where he co-organizes projects on Japanese security policy and regional security issues. Prior to joining the Stimson Center in August 2001, he worked as a program associate for the US-China Policy Foundation in Washington, D.C., serving as a coordinator of programs for congressional staff on China and US-China relations. He also worked as a program associate at the Japan Society in New York from 1995 to 1999, where he organized lectures and panel discussions on economic, political, and security issues relevant to US-Japan relations. He received his MA in China Studies and International Economics from the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS) in 2001 and a BA in International Studies from Earlham College in Indiana in 1995. He is co-editor of An Alliance for Engagement: Building Cooperation in Security Relations with China (Stimson Center, August 2002).